CT.org has always thought that Planners have a great opportunity and obligation to teach. Citizens, public officials and other city building professionals can learn much about the life, structure and potential of their city from a planner with the skills and attitude of a teacher. Yet, we spend little time learning to teach. Nick Fuhrman offers some advice; hopefully this is the first step in a journey to become a great teacher.

“With this talk, Dr. Nick Fuhrman encourages us to recognize the profound personal impact that we can have on others — both in and out of the classroom. Dr. Nick Fuhrman is an associate professor of environmental education in the Department of Agricultural Leadership, Education, and Communication.

“Also known as “Ranger Nick,” he teaches graduate courses in educational program development and data analysis and undergraduate courses in environmental education and teaching methods. Dr. Fuhrman received his bachelor's and master's degrees in Forestry from Virginia Tech and his PhD in Agricultural Education and Communication from the University of Florida.

“His life's passion is teaching, and he often uses live animals (such as snakes, turtles, and owls) in the classroom and on his monthly television series, Ranger Nick. Dr. Fuhrman and his wife, Jessica, have a son, Miles, who already seems to love animals and the outdoors as much as his dad. This talk was given at a TEDx event using the TED conference format but independently organized by a local community. “
